

Fun for all at the ACTON FAIR

The Acton Fall Fair parade was a hit with the hundreds of spectators which lined the route all along Mill Street and Knox Street into Prospect Park. The colorful parade featured a variety of floats, marching bands and baton twirlers like this girl.

Queen of the Fair Kelly Bishop sits proudly in the Queen's throne after she was announced Acton's 1988 Fall Fair Queen on Friday. She is joined by last year's fall fair queen Tracey Curtis (centre) and the two runners-up Shelly Patenaude (right) and Tracey Hagggett (left).

The Lorne Scots marching band was one of the marching bands in the Acton Fall Fair Parade which entertained hundreds of spectators along the parade route Saturday.

The parade leading into the Acton Fall Fair Saturday featured a variety of floats, bands and vehicles, like these all-terrain four wheel vehicles.

Photos by
Brian MacLeod

The horse events were popular with fairgoers at the Acton Fall Fair on Sunday. The rain held off for the weekend allowing more solid footing for the horses which had to race down a track and zig zag around a course.

These three children are all smiles on the Tilt-A-Whirl ride on the midway at the Acton Fall Fair Sunday. The fair was a success according to organizers and the midway was definitely a hit with the kids.

Greg Wagner, president of the Acton High School graduation committee, works on a Volkswagen at the Acton Fall Fair on Sunday.

The Fall Fair Queen pageant has always been a popular event at the Acton Fall Fair. Here, Acton queens of the past, including 1987 queen Tracey Curtis (right) wave to the crowd during the parade on Saturday.

Matthew Kimber kept most of the pins in the air throughout the fair on the weekend. Matthew is a member of the Georgetown Juggling Club which meets Fridays at Harrison Public School at 7 p.m.

Shawn Richard (3) concentrates as hard as he can to push those pedals one more time at the children's pedal pull contest at the Acton Fall Fair on Sunday.