Juniors win Halton, seniors lose tough one

Rebels rout Pats for fourth title

You might think that after four consecutive league championships a coach could be forgiven for becoming complacent.

But complacency is the last word you would use to describe Bob McKay of the GDHS Rebels junior boys volleyball team.

The junior Reb spikers bumped to their fourth straight Halton title last Wednesday and McKay was just as pumped up after the game as he undoubtedly was before the first ball was served up.

"Everyone played well," beamed McKay. "It's great when you can get the kids to play to their potential. They're great kids and they responded well all year."

Rebels took the championship in a relatively easy three-game home court sweep of the Pearson Patriots. After taking the first two games 15-7 and 15-8, Rebs encountered a more determined Patriot team in the third game but overcame a 9-9 tie to take the crown with a 15-11 win.

On the senior side, GDHS had a tougher time of it as the Rebels lost an exciting 3-2 match final to Blakelock in Oakville.

"Everyone played well," said Rebel coach Russ Linney. "But I think we have to work on getting a bit more excited before a game and maintaining that excitement."

Rebels dropped the first two games to Blakelock, fought back to win the next two and dropped a tight 15-11 final game as the Tabbies garnered the gold.

Linney said his charges are looking forward to getting another crack at Blakelock in the upcoming GHAC's in Hamilton next Wednesday.

Long's loss hurts Sr. Rebels

A second half letdown and an injury to a key performer hurt the Georgetown Rebels senior girls basketball team as the squad dropped a 49-41 sudden death semi-final to Blakelock Tabbies in Oakville last Tuesday.

"We had a textbook first half and fell apart in the second," said coach Moe Leeking. "We've beaten them three out of the last four years so we knew anything could happen."

An injury to Georgetown starter Shanna Long was a blow in the third quarter when Long went to the floor hard, after battling for a loose ball, and struck her head. The Rebel player was removed on a stretcher but Leeking said she was okay after being treated for a mild concussion.

Georgetown scored only 10 second half points after a 31-point first half. Heather Lawrence topped Rebel shooters with 14.

Georgetown grads excell in Ontario college rugby

There was a distinct Georgetown flavor in the OUAA's rugby football league this past season.

The university rugby schedule ended two weeks ago with Queen's defeating Waterloo for the league championship. During the course of the season not less than nine graduates of GDHS and the North Halton Rugby Football Club made their presence felt on various college sides.

"It's a compliment to GDHS and the calibre of rugby players we're producing around here," said North Halton RFC president Sandy Mackenzie.

The largest Georgetown contingent was found at Hamilton's McMaster University where two North Halton players saw action on the first side and two others on the second team.

Fullback Jamie Spiller and winger John Watts both played with McMaster's Firsts, which lost in the Ontario semi-finals to Waterloo. Rich Lawson and Andrew MacLeod were regulars on the Second XV.

North Halton captain and number eight Terry Pottruff played at the University of Toronto this past season and Casey Vanderaus, a shifty backliner, saw duty at Wilfrid Laurier. Mike Howie lined up with the Guelph Gryphons.

Two ex-GDHS players and former members of the North Halton club, Hal Martin and Peter Hughes, were also regulars in the university loop. Martin, who now plays club rugby with the Brampton Beavers, toiled at McMaster, while Hughes, a member of the Burlington Centaurs RFC, was a key performer for Brock University.

Mackenzie said he's hoping the extra experience gained by North Halton players in the college circuit will help the local squad in its battles on the rugby pitch next summer in the Niagara Rugby Union.
