The New Year's Eve parties at the Royal Canadian Legion, Branch 120 Georgetown, were a great success, according to all reports.

Monday afternoon saw president Hank Russell hosting the annual Levee in the lounge. During the visit by Mayor Russ Miller, President Hank presented a cheque for $8,000 to the town on behalf of Branch 120. This represents the Legion commitment to the development and landscaping of Remembrance Park, at the corner of James and Charles Streets in Georgetown.

Police hunt VCR thieves

Stolen video cassette recorders valued at $8,000 are the subject of this week's unsolved crime being investigated by Halton Regional Police Force.

Police were alerted by an alarm at G.S. Television, 265 Guelph St., Georgetown on Nov. 4, 1988 at approximately 12:30 a.m. On arrival it was discovered that the store had been entered by someone removing the cylinder from the front door lock. Once inside, the culprit(s) removed the following 14 video cassette recorders, including the following brands: four Zenith, four RCA, and six Panasonic. They were varying models.

Police Identification officers have gathered fingerprint impressions from the scene.

CRIME STOPPERS

Crime Stoppers will pay up to $1,000 for information that leads to an arrest in this case or any other case. Callers are not required to reveal their identities or testify in court. The Crime Stoppers toll-free number is 1-800-668-5151.

Auto electronics surging ahead

(NC)—By the 1991 model year, the electronic content of automobiles will increase 100 percent compared with 1988-model-year vehicles, according to engineering specialists at General Motors of Canada. By the mid 1990s we will probably see an "electronic chariot" with an electronics centre that controls hundreds of functions, from anti-lock brakes and power steering to in-car navigation and voice-actuated vehicle systems.

As the number of major electronic functions doubles every five years, experimental and development work for future cars is surging ahead at Delco Electronics, a subsidiary of General Motors' Hughes Electronics Corp. Delco is North America's number one supplier of automotive electronics and the world's largest producer of control computers.

At the heart of automotive electronic systems is the microprocessor. One example of what this tiny but highly sophisticated unit does: develop "active suspension" control for a high performance, smoother, more stable ride under any conceivable road or handling situation. By using a microprocessor, signals from wheel, engine and body sensors can be analyzed to execute split-second suspension system changes without any driver input.

As the number of applications proliferate, space and cost limitations have forced automotive engineers to focus their efforts on smaller computers with more highly integrated circuitry, fewer connections and increased reliability. At the same time, those microprocessors must accommodate more functions with greater levels of complexity and sophistication for trouble-free motoring.
