

Costs go up for Prospect Park treatment plant

The cost of building a water treatment plant in Acton's Prospect Park has gone up by more than $54,000.

The main reason for the increase is a decision to relocate the proposed water treatment station and pumphouse to the centre of Prospect Park, between two baseball diamonds, from the westerly tip of the park.

Halton had proposed to spend more than $194,000 for engineering fees by building the water treatment plant next to the pumphouse at the western tip of the park. But the town of Halton Hills asked the Region to relocate it to the centre of the park. The building will include washrooms and a room to house light switches for the park.

Halton intends to spend about $2 million on the new treatment plant which is needed to allow further development in Acton.

The town wants to spend about $76,000 to move the three diamonds, and expand and light the middle diamond. Those changes have yet to be approved by the town's budget committee.

Construction of the new water treatment plant is expected to be completed in April, 1990.
