Around and about in Halton Hills

The provincial government announced a $1,000 grant for the Students Against Drunk Driving (SADD) chapter at Georgetown District High School last week. About 16 students are active in SADD at the high school and the money will be used to hold fundraising events and other functions to heighten the awareness of drunk driving. SADD members gathered in the library to receive the cheque from the

has planned month-long activities for students. Left to right are Sean Ashbee, Alisa Exclby and J.R. Boynton, all Grade 1 students.
