

Join in the celebration

What would spring be without the annual musical "Spring Celebration" of the Georgetown Choral Society. Like raking the lawn and watching spring bulbs emerge from the garden, the spring concert has become somewhat of a tradition for Georgetown's residents. Friday, April 21 and Saturday, April 22, at the Alliance Church, Main Street South you will be presented with a varied program.

The poetry of Walt Whitman had a powerful fascination for British composers in the closing years of the 19th century and afterwards, perhaps because its lack of a regular meter made it peculiarly apt for musical settings and also because it reflected the questing spirit of mankind as a new century approached. One of the composers who turned to Whitman was Ralph Vaughan Williams. Vaughan Williams' first Whitman settings were composed in 1904, and in 1905 he started out with "Darest thou now, O soul, walk out with me toward the unknown region." The work was completed in 1906 and submitted to the Leeds Festival where he conducted it on October 10, 1907. It was a great success and led to him being acclaimed as "the foremost of the younger generation" in England. "Toward the Unknown Region" has retained the interest of choral societies because it is well written and also because the music, romantic in idiom, has an unerring sense of elation. It is also, of course, fascinating to hear the emerging trademarks of the mature Vaughan Williams: the abrupt key-changes, the plodding pizzicato bass, the swift build-up to a climax. The work is constructed from two main themes, one solemn, the other aspiring, but a third is introduced for the final exultant section.

Although Vaughan Williams is often a favorite of the Choral Society, you will also be hearing Randall Thompson's setting of Robert Frost, compositions of the late Barry Gosse and a very special surprise from Andrew Lloyd Webber. Tickets for this concert are available from Oxbow Books or from any choir member, or from 877-6839.

INSURANCE AWARDS AND SICK PAY
QUESTION: I was given $12,000 in benefits from an insurance company for injuries I suffered in a car accident (It was the other guy's fault) While I was in the hospital for two weeks, my employer paid me half of my regular wages. How do I figure all this out for my income tax?

ANSWER: The $12,000 is not taxable. The wages paid while you were in the hospital are fully taxable and will be included on your T4 slip.
