FROM CONSUMER REPORTS

By the Editors of Consumer Reports

A long stint of work, sport or shopping can leave muscles sore or tense. An electric heating pad often helps, but it limits your mobility. Now, there's an alternative — heat-yourself wraps that you can strap on and wear around the house.

Recently, Consumer Reports' testers evaluated two: the Champ Hot Quickwrap and the Spenco Hot Wrap, available in drugstores. Both contain reusable packets of goo that can be quickly heated in a microwave oven.

According to Consumer Reports' medical consultant, sore muscles respond best to a temperature of about 115 degrees Fahrenheit. Both wraps could hold that temperature, but the Champ held it longer and was easier to use.

The Champ is meant to slip into a bandage-like wrap and then be heated. It comes in one rather small size — about 4½-by-9½-by-½ inches — and is priced at $8.99. It claims to "stay hot" for about an hour. In Consumer Reports' tests, it reached about 130 degrees when microwaved and stayed above 100 degrees for an hour.

It remained at 110 degrees to 120 degrees, the best range for sore muscles, for about 45 minutes.

All in all, the Champ seemed reasonably safe and convenient, with a substantial cover to prevent burns. Its plastic gel pack can withstand heating for at least twice the recommended time of a minute or so in the microwave oven. It's an inexpensive way to apply spot heating to small areas of the body.
