

Campbell House Gallery is "something unique" owner Janice Campbell says

Janice Campbell, owner of Campbell House Gallery at 115 Main Street in Georgetown hopes her gallery will put Georgetown on the map for local residents and for people from out of town.

"I want to provide something unique to the area," she said.

The gallery showcases work of contemporary and internationally known artists.

The gallery houses a variety of art forms and furniture, including fine solid wood furniture, high quality upholstery, original art, oil and sculpture, limited edition prints and Waterford crystal and Wedgewood china. The crystal and china were only recently added to the gallery's selection.

The Campbell House Gallery also scheduled a series of art shows for this fall. They include The French Connection in September, the International Group starting in October and running into November, the work of artist Raimond Rickevicius, in November and the Selected Artists Colour and Form Society in November and December.

Each show will be followed by a private reception where champagne and caviar will be served.

The gallery will host another series of shows this spring, Ms. Campbell said. A schedule of the dates will be published. For further information contact Ms. Campbell at the gallery at 873-0674 or refer to Slate, a gallery magazine.

The gallery is run by Ms. Campbell and Raimond Rickevicius, an artist who has trained under Norman Rockwell.

Mr. Rickevicius, also an interior design consultant, is the gallery's manager.

Ms. Campbell is an eight-year resident of Georgetown.

John Vince Bulk Food's is the largest bulk food chain in North America, owner says

John Vince Foods is the largest bulk food chain in North America, says the Georgetown store owner, Pino Macri. There are 20 stores located throughout North America, he said. The chain also supplies most of the continent's largest supermarkets with bulk foods.

The store carries a full line of bulk foods, Mr. Macri said. Mr. Macri and his brother, the store's co-owner, Vito, can do this because they are part of a bulk food chain, Mr. Macri said. Customers will also find an assortment of cheeses, vitamins and health products at John Vince stores, he said.

The brothers also offer specialized service to their customers. If they don't have a product their customers want, they will order it, he said. And for those who are buying food for community events or parties, the brothers offer wholesale prices, Mr. Macri said.

The specialized service means the store has several repeat customers, he said.

The brothers opened the store eight months ago and their policy ever since has been to make people aware of the savings that accompany buying food in bulk instead of packages. The store also allows customers to buy the amount of a product that fits their needs. According to Mr. Macri people are becoming more aware of the savings by buying food in bulk.

The brothers have a total of 10 years experience in the bulk food industry.

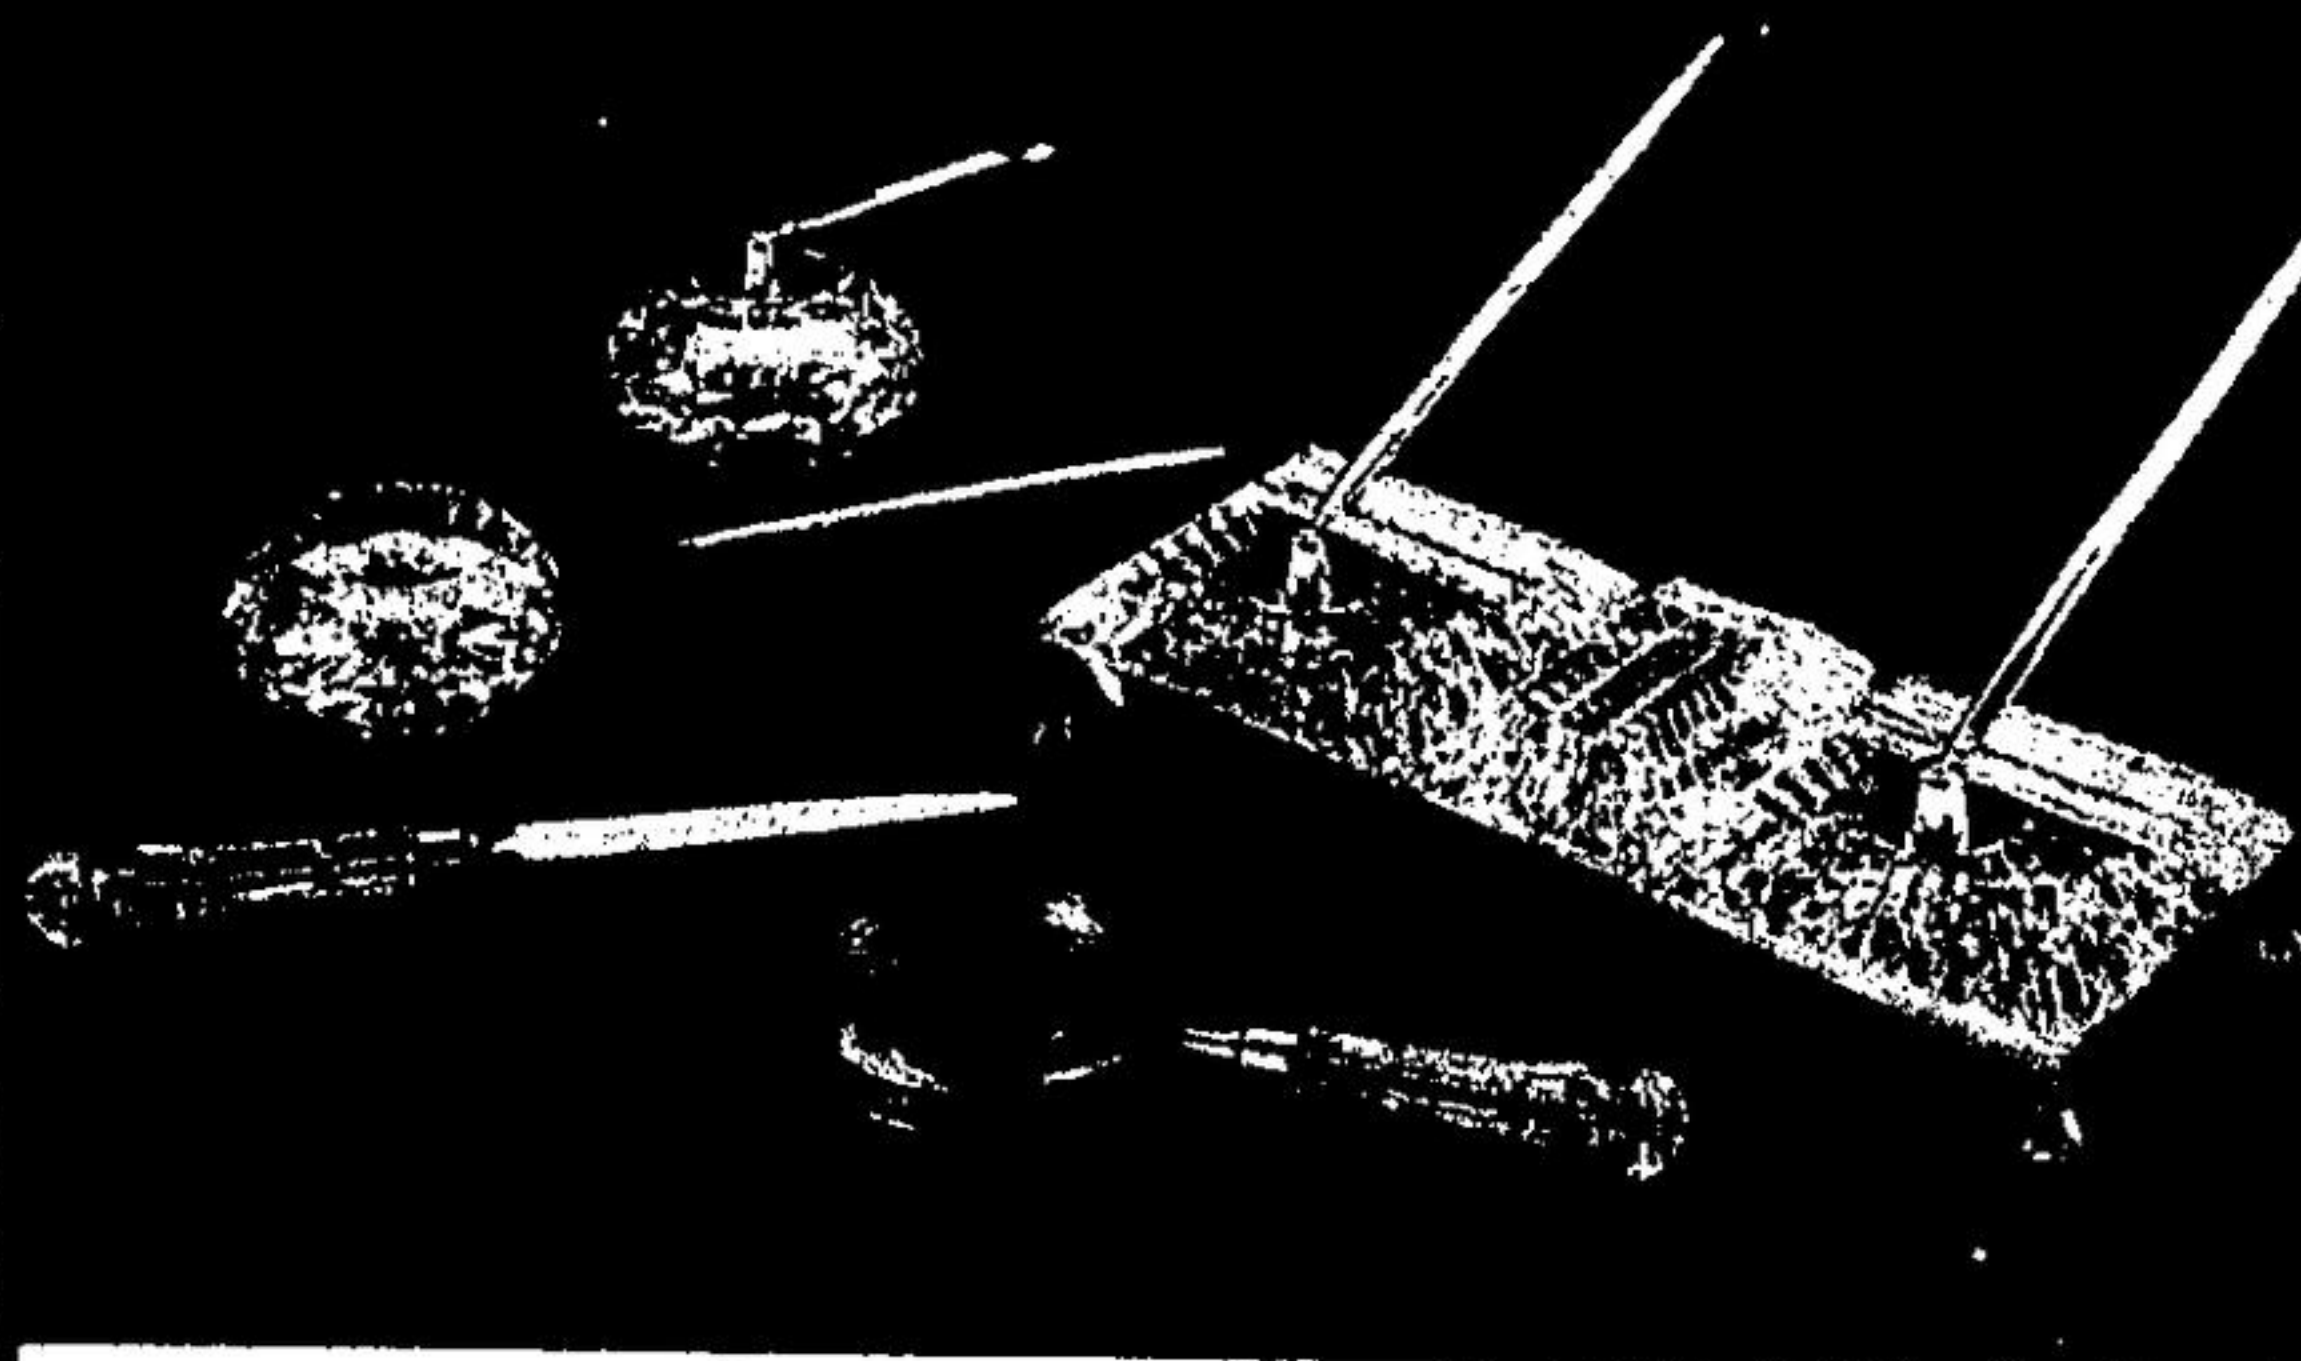

As the public becomes more waste conscious buying in bulk allows customers to purchase appropriate quantities of goods, so that nothing is wasted, Mr. Macri said.

The brothers, who run the store with Carmen Macri and Tina Macri, also own a John Vince Foods franchise in Bolton.
