Watch for leukopenia

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm a 52-year-old female with leukopenia. I've had many tests, including bone marrow. My hematologist referred me to a specialist in a teaching hospital, and the specialist thought my blood pressure medicine could have caused this. They haven't done anything but keep a close check on me. Do you have any suggestions?

DEAR READER: Many medicines, including antibiotics and drugs for hypertension, can have harmful effects. These often take the form of an allergic reaction, which affects the bone marrow where most new blood cells are made. When the bone marrow is damaged, the number of blood corpuscles diminishes in the bloodstream.

You seem to have an insufficient quantity of white blood cells (leukopenia) that was a complication of your medical therapy. In this case, it would be appropriate for your doctors to stop your medicine and give you another type.

The physicians were correct in adopting a wait-and-see approach, because once the offending agent is withdrawn, your bone marrow should recover and produce the proper number of blood cells. Introducing a new type of blood pressure medicine while monitoring your condition would not affect the outcome.

If, during a few weeks of observation and re-testing, your blood count does not return to normal, the doctors have a problem. They will either have to treat your leukopenia — with medication or transfusions — or consider other possible causes for leukopenia, such as immune deficiencies or malignancies.

The specialist should be able to monitor your case. Thank you for writing. Your letter serves as a reminder that all medicine has the potential — albeit small, in most instances — to harm as well as heal.

To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Consumer Tips on Medicine." Other readers who would like a copy should send $1.25 with their name and address to P.O. Box 91369, Cleveland, OH 44101-3369. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My mother has been diagnosed with palsy. From what I read in the newspaper, she has slowness of movement, muscular rigidity and tremor similar to Parkinson's disease. Please define the difference between Parkinson's and palsy.

DEAR READER: Palsy is a paralysis: One or more muscles stops work-
