bleaches are unlikely to do much to remove this dye. Chlorine bleach might do a fairly good job, if the fabrics are safe for chlorine bleach (cottons, polyesters and blends should be fine; bleaching turns nylon yellow).

A good solution is color remover, sold with the home fabric dyes in variety, department and grocery stores.

Follow directions carefully, of course. The job of this product is to remove dye from fabric, and that's exactly what you need done, so it should do the trick. Good luck! — POLLY

DEAR POLLY — I can't believe I let this happen, but I managed to dye a good deal of my husband's underwear and white shirts pink by washing them with some colored clothes. So far, my regular bleach has not removed the color, and I'm getting desperate. Is there anything that will get the color out? — BETTY

DEAR BETTY — Believe me, at times it happens to all of us! A new red T-shirt, a careless moment and presto! Pink undies! All-fabric
