

Artisans offer children's art program

In the past, the Credit Valley Artisans have been besieged with zealous parental pleas. In response, they have designed a children's art program that will alleviate the February Blahs for both parents and their budding Van Gough.

The C.V.A. is offering four children's multi-media workshops that will be held on the four Saturdays of February from 10 a.m. to 12 noon. These workshops have been designed for children between the ages of seven and 10.

The first workshop will be an offering from the Pallet and Pencil Club, the second workshop will be A Pseudo Stain Glass session and then it's off to the basement to experiment with clay during the third workshop. The final workshop will spin off into the wonderful world of weaving.

The course fee (for this mini multi-media program for the mini artists), has been economically priced. If you would like to enroll your child or would like further information, please contact Joanna Dobbin at (416) 877-3532.

Furry friends

Area Cub Scouts were exposed to a variety of activities including ham radio operation, scuba diving, rope making and wood carving at the annual North Halton District Resource Workshop for second-year Cubs at the St. John's United Church hall, Saturday morning. One of the other activities was an interesting talk given by Second Georgetown cub master John Stevens on guinea pigs. (Herald photo)

Halton's education chief to speak at George Kennedy

Bob Williams, Director of the Halton Board of Education, will be in Georgetown on Tuesday, Feb. 13, at George Kennedy Public School, to speak on Toward 2000, the board's vision for the 21st century.

The executive of the Kennedy Connection Parent-Teacher Organization encourages all interested members of the community to come out to discover what the face of education will look like in our schools in the future. Through his presentation, Mr. Williams will explore the goals and directions the board is striving for by the turn of the century.

Mr. Williams' remarks will begin at 7:30 p.m., with an opportunity for discussion to follow. Other educational resource people will also be in attendance for the program.

For more information, please contact Karen Hewer, past president, The Kennedy Connection at 877-0489.
