Sports safety program

Ministry developing guidelines

Ontarians will soon participate in safer sports, fitness and recreation facilities with the assistance of new safety guidelines developed by the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation.

Ontario Minister of Tourism and Recreation Ken Black announced the Risk Management and Safety in Facilities Project, a major initiative designed to encourage safer sports practices and create safer facilities for participants.

"With the high number of sports injuries, the difficulty in obtaining adequate insurance coverage, and past liability suits, the Ministry's Safety Leadership Office recognizes the need to address these issues in amateur sport, fitness and recreation activities throughout Ontario," Mr. Black said. "The result is the Risk Management and Safety in Facilities Project."

Under the direction of the committee, a risk management consulting firm will examine existing safety standards and design resource materials that can be used by sports organizations, facility owners and operators to maintain a safe environment for all participants. This includes identifying safety risks inherent in each sport and determining ways to reduce these risks.

This program responds to the concern over the number and costs of injuries incurred in sport, fitness and recreation activities.

The program has two main elements: a Safety Leadership Office located in the Ministry to coordinate a long-term safety strategy; a Minister's Advisory Committee on Sport, Fitness and Recreation Safety to assist and advise the Ministry on safety-related matters.

The Safety Program includes a variety of activities, initiatives and projects in six areas: Public Awareness, Training and Education, Research and Development, Risk Management and Safety Strategies, Grants and Incentives, and Coordination and Leadership.

The Public Awareness component will create an informed and knowledgeable public concerning the issues of personal safety in participation. The program includes a public awareness and marketing campaign, and a public information centre at the Ontario Sports Centre.

Training and Education aims to educate sport, fitness and recreation practitioners, leaders and participants in the areas of safety and injury prevention. It includes educational and training booklets, posters, and programs.

Research and Development aims to develop policies and strategies that can enhance safe participation in sports. It includes a data collection system to track and monitor the numbers and economic costs of injuries in the province, as well as research projects with specific sports organizations to determine the nature and causes of injuries.
