

Derek Edwardson near perfection

The attempt at immortality in five-pin bowling, the perfect game, just eluded Derek Edwardson.

Bowling every Sunday morning in the Neilson's league at Georgetown Bowl, Edwardson had everyone on pins and needles leading up to the final frame, the tenth.

After nine consecutive strikes, Derek tried for the tenth one and knocked all the pins but the right three pin. A very odd knock-down since normally it would be the two-pin that's left standing, but however both corner pins were down.

Edwardson spared it but only hit the same three pin on his third ball for a 405 single game instead of 450.

This also caused him to fall short by two pins of a 900 triple.

Other six-hundred bowlers in the league were Jim Cluett 613 (280), and John Bothelo 608 (247).

The Monday Night Men's League also produced an attempt to reach the high 900 triple. Brinley Hole rolled three steady games of 305, 299 and 273 for a 877 three game score.

Peel Selects are improving

At the beginning of the year, the very young North Peel Selects volleyball team would have been overjoyed at winning three games at a tournament.

Not so any longer as the team, despite winning three games at Mayfield High School on Saturday, felt they should have done much better.

In fact the squad knew that a medal round qualification had slipped through their grasp.

Grouped with teams from Buffalo, Kitchener, Oshawa and Scarborough, the Star Fuels sponsored team knew that a good performance was essential.

The Selects lost both matches to an experienced and awesome Buffalo team. They then split games with a Kitchener team that they had never beaten by scores of 5-15 and 15-9.

Their undoing came as they lost both games to Oshawa Genesis, a team the Selects should have beaten. Had they split or swept, a berth in the medal round would have been attained.

The North Peel Selects then swept Scarborough Nova by scores of 15-11 and 15-9.

Locals Darby Erler, Stephanie O'Brien and Christie Hallett now have a week off from tournament play before travelling to Windsor, Feb. 24.

NBA is capable of scoring 30-or-more points on any given night.

Although you have to be able to score to play in the NBA, there are some pros who keep their roster spots mainly because of other talents.

Rebounding, for example.

The majority of the top NBA rebounders, such as Akeem Olajuwon, Charles Barkley and Karl Malone, can "fill it up" pretty well. But there are several top "glass" men with a less-than-nodding acquaintance with the net.

In fact, among those NBA players with at least 100 rebounds last season, 15 had more rebounds than points scored.

The leader of this rather specialized crew was Charles Jones of Washington. The 6-foot-9 Jones pulled down 257 boards while scoring only 136 points in 1,154 minutes played.

That works out to 1.89 rebounds for every point scored — the highest such ratio in the league.

Following on Jones' heels were two other players not usually associated with scoring. Mark Eaton of Utah was runner-up, pulling down 1.66 rebounds per point (843 to 508), with Greg Kite of Charlotte and the Los Angeles Clippers third at 1.62 (243 to 150).

By the way, Jones and Kite were also the only members of another little-publicized group last season: NBA players with more personal fouls than points (minimum 100 personals). Jones fouled 187 times, for a ratio of 1.38 fouls per point, with Kite second at 1.07 (161 fouls).

In the category of playmaking, there were four NBA players who totaled more assists than points (minimum 100 assists). Utah's Jim Les led the way with 1.56 assists per point scored (215 to 138). Following him were Tyrone "Muggsy" Bogues of Charlotte (1.47, 620 to 423), Nate McMillan of Seattle (1.31, 696 to 532) and Craig Neal of Miami and Portland (1.04, 118 to 114).
