Audiences love Al Bundy

By Frank Sanello

Ed O'Neill

"Married ... With Children" is the biggest hit on the fledgling Fox TV network. American audiences have fallen in love with the gross antics of the lowlife Bundy family of Chicago.

Ed O'Neill is Al Bundy, the overworked and underpaid shoe salesman who heads the family. His slovenly wife Peg doesn't work outside the house - or inside either. Their son Bud is a devious pre-adolescent, and daughter Kelly is the most promiscuous girl in high school.

TV has come a long way from "Father Knows Best."

O'Neill himself hails from a blue-collar family. Born and raised in Youngstown, Ohio, he escaped the family tradition of steel-mill work by winning a football scholarship to Ohio University.

Q. What is the appeal of "Married ... With Children"?

A. We say a lot of things people would like to say but don't. Most people lead lives of quiet desperation. The Bundys lead lives of noisy desperation.

Q. The Bundys are probably the most outrageous family portrayed on TV. Do you think there are people like the Bundys in real life?

A. A lot of families are like the Bundys. That's why I think the show is a success. Even though we're cartoonish in many ways, there has to be some truth in what we're doing, otherwise people wouldn't find us funny.

Q. Are you in any way like Al Bundy?

A. I don't have any children, and I read a lot - but I am like him. I do have his sense of humor. His self-deprecating humor comes from me. We both look at things cynically. I'm like Al in a lot more ways than I'd probably like to admit.

Q. Did you base Al on anybody you know?

A. When I read the first script, I thought of a couple of my uncles. He's not at all like my father, who's very quiet and shy. But they share the same blue-collar roots. My father worked in a steel mill until it closed, then he drove a truck for Exxon.

Q. Is it frustrating to be seen by a smaller audience because you're on the Fox network, which has a smaller lineup of stations than the other three networks?

A. No, because Fox was the only network where we could have been given a shot. No other network would have allowed us to do what we've done.

I can't complain. Fox has been very good to us, basically by leaving us alone. "Married ... With Children" would have been watered down and ruined by another network.

If You Haven't Hob-Nobbed With "The Bob", YOU SHOULD!
