Supergroom married at John Elliott Theatre

By LISA RUTLEDGE

He's faster than a speeding bullet - able to jump over a building, or a wedding cake, in a single bound - he's Supergroom - and he was married at the John Elliott Theatre Thursday night.

Supergroom, the play, was the final result of the creativity of a three-week theatre camp organized by the Halton Hills Recreation and Parks Department.

Camp supervisor, Rosemary Davison, said the seven to 14-year-old participants spent their first few days brainstorming. With the encouragement and leadership of Rockwood's scriptwriter, Dale Hamilton, the children's ideas took the superhuman form of Supergroom.

The play centred on a bride Erika, who planned to marry George, the groom. The trouble began when the bride, played by Meghan Israel, received a phone call warning her she would be in danger if she married George, played by Michael Armstrong. No one knew the groom, really Supergroom, played by Ryan Gieson, saved the bride after she was kidnapped by the priest, who later admitted he was her former lover. The priest received a guilty sentence and the bride and her Supergroom were married after all.

During the three weeks of planning and rehearsal, the theatre camp participants learned dance, mime and even improvisation. Miss Davison is pleased how specialized the theatre camp has become and the range of skills it offers children.

Since the camp is so specialized it attracts children who are enthusiastic about theatre. "Meeting everyday to work on something they created is encouraging for kids because they are working together on a project," said Miss Davison. "It's special when they can see their own creativity hit the stage, she said.
