

Federal employees streamline the bargaining process

Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance of Canada has signed a Memorandum of Understanding that will streamline the process for the next round of collective bargaining. Under the terms of the agreement, 27 bargaining units representing some 158,000 federal employees will be combined to form seven negotiating tables, and employees who would continue to work in the event of a strike will be identified before negotiations begin.

"I am very pleased that we have been able to agree on a process for the next round of bargaining," Treasury Board President Robert de Cotret said. "Both parties are determined to avoid the kind of lengthy delays that occurred in the past, and this new process promises to do just that."

The President of the Alliance, Daryl Bean, said, "The Memorandum of Understanding enables us to remove a major hindrance to efficient negotiations. This is good news for our members."

As a result of the agreement, seven bargaining tables will be set up, each regrouping a number of bargaining units, to negotiate seven agreements. Should the parties at a given table not be able to agree through direct negotiations, a single conciliation panel would be put in place to resolve outstanding issues for that table.

The issue of designated employees will also be settled before formal negotiations begin. Designated employees are those who perform duties necessary in the interest of the safety or security of the public and who therefore are prohibited from striking. In the past, designations were finalized after talks had broken down and this often involved lengthy delays at a critical stage in the process. This time, the list of designations will be negotiated between October 1 and December 31, 1990, several months before formal negotiations begin. Designations not agreed upon by December 31 will be referred to designations review panels, which will be required to render binding decisions by February 28, 1991.
