Hockey season is anticipated

I made my first trip to the Alcott Arena recently, to take pictures of the first AAA hockey tryouts. Doing so, I couldn't help but think about how many more times I will be passing through those doors this winter.

Hockey is my favourite sport. Even years of being a true Maple Leaf fan have failed to dampen my enthusiasm for the game, so I'm looking forward to covering the many different hockey groups that play here in Georgetown. I'm not just enthusiastic about reporting on the games, I can't wait to lace on the blades and play some shiny. Again, in a hockey town such as this, I wasn't surprised to learn there were a few leagues that catered to recreational hockey.

I don't know exactly what it is about the sport, but I enjoy watching almost any team play (hence the years of visiting the Gardens in T.O.). I know Alex Tough will disagree, but I find hockey more interesting to watch than soccer. I enjoy soccer, especially when there is a particularly good ball handler turning the opposition inside out, but I think part of the enjoyment is that part of the game closely parallels a forward racing across centre ice on a two-on-one play. The player can either pass or try to deke or even shoot.

I think it's the variety of things that can happen in a hockey game that make it that much more interesting to watch. Heck, sometimes the fights are better than what Wide World of Sports has to offer. Where baseball (my second favourite) is more often one player against another (pitcher vs.

batter), hockey moves much more quickly and involves more of the team much more often.

Basketball is alright, but beyond playing HORSE or 21, I never got that interested in making it a team effort when I was in school. True, there's not much that can beat seeing Michael Jordan slam one in on a replay, but on the other hand, it's something far beyond what a person of my height or dribbling ability could ever accomplish.

I think most people are the same way about the sport they find to be their favourite. Whichever one they played well in their more youthful days (or when they had the time to play them more) they tend to carry in their hearts forever. If you can't play the game anymore, you watch it (or referee it. Just kidding, I couldn't resist).

Anyhow, I just had to express my pleasure and pleasant anticipation about the upcoming hockey season and I hope the fans will have as much fun watching their favourite teams play as much as I will. See you in the stands.
