A 3-3 pipe dream

By James Jacoby

In his rush to make an overtrick, declarer missed the best chance for the contract. West got off to an apparently safe trump lead. Declarer played low from dummy and East played the nine. South won the 10 and cashed the ace, dropping East's queen. Next came the A-K of clubs, followed by a heart to dummy's jack. Next came a club ruff, in the hope that the defenders had both started with three clubs. No such luck. Declarer now had to struggle with a side-suit position in spades that just did not lend itself to producing more than one trick. So declarer lost two diamonds and two spade tricks for down one.

Sure, declarer would have had 11 tricks if the clubs had split. But rather than sacrifice his communication with dummy after playing the A-K of clubs, he should simply get off lead with a diamond. The defenders can take two diamonds in any order, but what is their next step? If East ends up on lead and plays a club, South can ruff, get to dummy and ruff another club, and dummy's last club is now set up for the game-going trick. A diamond continuation by either defender yields a sluff and a ruff. And if the defenders play the spade suit, South will be able to develop a second trick in spades via the strength of the J-10.

The defense can prevail only if the opening lead is the ace and a diamond. East can win the second diamond and play back a club, and declarer will surely lose two more spade tricks when he is forced to tackle that suit on his own.

James Jacoby's books "Jacoby on Bridge" and "Jacoby on Card Games" (written with his father, the late Oswald Jacoby) are now available at bookstores. Both are published by Pharos Books © 1990, NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.
