Environment studies

Georgetown District High School students involved in the O.A.C. (Ontario Academic Credit) Geography course, involved themselves in issues concerning the environment last Thursday. Students created an environment project which consisted of facts about their chosen area of study. Pictured above are four students who decided to devote their project on Air and Water Pollution and its effects on the environment. Left to right are: Bruce Jakes, Christine Gaspar, Sophia Djuk and Rebecca Hepburn. The project's aim is to make students more aware of the environment. (Herald photo by Mark Tufford)

Acton High School report

University choice important decision

By G. Elliott and Colleen Gregg

Senior High School students! Looking at University for the future? Confused?

You're not alone! Many students throughout Ontario are in the same position as you, facing the same dilemmas as time quickly dwindles for making decisions that will affect a lifetime.

We, as graduating students at Acton High School, have tried to ease some of the difficulty in making these important decisions by examining all the options and finding out what's best for us.

If university is part of the plan for your future, some of the questions you may be asking yourself are: "Which university is right for me?", "Am I ready to handle the change in lifestyle?", "Am I ready to move away from home?"

These questions are hard to answer but your school can be very helpful in aiding you with making the right choices by giving you the opportunity to experience what university is all about.

Acton High has shed much light on a cornucopia of universities, including Guelph, Waterloo, Toronto and Brock.

The last one, which is nestled in the heart of St. Catharines, provided us with an objective outlook on the university scene. It offers several opportunities each month for curious secondary school students to investigate its premises and the programs it makes available.

A small group from Acton had the chance to attend a Liberal Studies day at Brock.

This special day included a tour of residence buildings, lecture halls and social facilities, which all gave us a better idea of what awaited us at university.

The most enlightening part of the visit came late in the afternoon when we had a chance to attend a seminar conducted by a professor of the university.

This seminar revolved around an essay written by Montaigne, a 16th Century French author, entitled "Of Cannibals". A discussion on the essay in which thoughts and opinions were encouraged to flow enabled us to taste a slice of higher academia.

Basically, the professor was looking for free discussion, and everyone was able to express their personal views. All ideas were looked upon with positive appraisal.

Many universities offer information sessions like the one at Brock, and if you're serious about attending university next fall, we suggest you contact your school's guidance office regarding opportunities to attend.

Or, you can even visit one on your own. When everything's boiled down, the programs each university offers are quite similar, academically-speaking. It may be just a matter of which school generates an atmosphere to your liking.

University is a decision that will affect a lifetime, and if you aren't happy with the choice you've made, your hoping for achievement may suffer.

In any case, good luck, and remember to have your applications into your school by December 3rd.
