Korean War film available from War Amps of Canada

FALL 1990 - This year marks the 40th anniversary of the start of the Korean War. The War Amps of Canada is re-releasing its popular film, KOREA: Canada's Forgotten War, to pay homage to this special anniversary and to the gallant men who lost their lives in this battle.

"We felt it was important to mark this occasion," stated Cliff Chadderton, chief executive officer of The War Amps and producer of the film, "especially for those who lost loved ones in this war. "This is the first hour-long production based on the magnificent Canadian Armed Forces contribution to the Korean War. Most Canadians know about the major campaigns, of World War I and World War II, but few can even locate Kapyong, probably the best known battle from Korea. It was for this battle that the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry of Canada's 25th Brigade received a Presidential Citation from the United States government. "In fact," states Chadderton, "Canadian authorities have not even elevated the contribution of Canada's forces in Korea to the status of a war. They still insist, because there was no official declaration, that it be known only as a conflict. Hopefully our release, and re-release, of our film will change all that."

The war commenced in June, 1950 and ended with a fragile peace treaty three years later. During that time Canada suffered more than 1,200 battle casualties. Another 516 never returned home.

The film is based primarily on the engagements of three of Canada's senior infantry regiments in the war: the Royal Canadian Regiment, the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry and the Royal 22nd Regiment (better known as the famous 'Vandoos').

The War Amps was able to locate authentic film footage, much of which has never been shown before. The film is rounded out by interviews with Canadian veterans while they were on a pilgrimage to former battle locations in Korea earlier this year.

'Korea: Canada's Forgotten War', is part of The War Amps NEVER AGAIN film series. The films are funded by corporate donations and are made available to television and cable outlets, schools and the public, free of charge.
