GDHS Co-op program

Co-op (Co-operative education) students at Georgetown District High School were busy last Wednesday with their Careers Day presentations at the high school.

Students involved in the program were showing off displays that featured information about their co-op and what it was.

The main goal of the co-op program is to introduce students to the work force and give them an idea of what it is like, and at the same time give them valuable work experience in their chosen field. Co-op also serves to either cement students ideas of what they want to be, or show them what it is really like so that they can decide whether or not they want a career in that field.

There were nearly 40 displays at the high school last Wednesday, and all of them were different in their own way. Students are not restricted to the choices that are offered in the course outline, if the student can find a placement themselves they can basically choose their own co-op.

This year there were only a few out of the ordinary co-ops, such as Funeral Director and Equestrian care. Other co-op displays at Careers Day included: data processing, teaching, nursing, journalism and law enforcement.

All of the co-op students participating in the Careers Day put a lot of time and effort into their displays, and were rewarded with interested students asking questions about their co-op placements and the co-op program itself.

As I myself am a co-op student, I would like to take the time to thank everyone involved in the co-op program, and especially the Halton Hills Herald and its employees for giving me a chance and making me feel very much at home. Thanks guys.
