Hydro updates safety code

In an effort to provide continued protection for customers and workers, Ontario Hydro has updated the Electrical Safety Code to include a number of amendments and new regulations.

The changes, which take effect March 4, will also ensure that the province's Electrical Safety Code is consistent with the Ontario Building Code and with electrical codes in other provinces.

Several amendments to the Electrical Safety Code concerning the private power industry are designed to help meet Ontario Hydro's energy conservation and efficiency goals. Amendments to the code will also allow the installation of 'Smart House' technology as it becomes available.

Other major changes to the Electrical Safety Code include:

- improving the reliability of smoke detectors by prohibiting their connection to circuits protected by ground fault circuit interrupters.

- installation rules for a number of new products,

- a requirement that timers be included in field-assembled saunas to improve their safety.

- installation rules governing lifts for the handicapped,
- a new section covering amusement parks, carnivals, and travelling shows.

About 400 changes in total have been made. The Electrical Safety Code was last updated April 1984.

The new regulations are contained in a revised Electrical Safety Code that is available as of Feb. 11, at any Ontario Hydro inspection office.

The previous Electrical Safety Code can be used until April 15.
