Actors in the play 'Early Frost' to be performed June 5 in the Georgetown District High School cafeteria practised a scene from their play. Here, Hannah (Jennifer Burrill) recoils in horror as the women she assumed was murdered 50 years ago,

Lydia (Bianca Dubois) appears. Looking on is social worker Mr. Clayton (Joy Swain) with little girl Alice (Emily Hamilton). (Herald photo by Lisa Boonstoppel-Pot)

Two plays planned by GDHS students

For the last two months, dramatic art students at Georgetown and District High School have been preparing for two one-act plays they'll present at 7:30 p.m. on June 5 in the school auditorium.

The plays, titled 'Impromptu' and 'Early Frost' are being produced entirely by students with student producers, actors and directors.

The director of Impromptu, Lisa Sheppard, explained the play is a story about four different actors improvising a play while trying to distinguish between reality and illusion. It stars Andrew Zubacs as Tony, Sarah Mills as Winnifred and Andrea Bouskill as Lora.

Early Frost is the story of a family haunted by an event which took place 50 years before, leaving a rather prominent skeleton in their closet. It is directed by Amy Leaks and features actors Tina Daquano as Louise, Jennifer Burrill as Hannah, Emily Hamilton as Alice, Bianca Dubois as Lydia and Joy Swain as Mrs. Clayton.

The plays are put on as part of the school's dramatic art course requirements.

Admission for the productions is free and tickets are available at the door of the school cafetorium.
