Solving problems with your clothes washer

HOME IMPROVEMENT TIPS

Today's Beaver home improvement tip is about solving problems with your clothes washer.

If your washer won't even fill with water, follow this procedure:

Open the water valves to the machine fully, then turn them off. Remove the hoses from the valves with a set of pliers and then clean any sediment from the water supply screens with a stiff brush, before replacing the hoses.

Next, unplug the washer and remove the back, which is usually held by four to six screws. Check the inlet hoses to make sure they aren't kinked, broken, or fouled in some way. If the washer is getting water as far as the inlet hose connections, the problem is likely in the water valve or water valve switch. Repairing or changing these parts is a job for a qualified service person.

If the water won't drain from the drum of the washer, make sure the timer on the control panel is properly set and that it has gone through the complete cycle.

If there's still a problem, inspect the discharge hose for any blockage or kinks. If this isn't the problem, remove the back of the washer and check for loose wires leading to the motor. If they seem to be intact, then it's a problem best left to a pro.

Finally, if there is a leak, it's probably in the hose connection, around the tub seals, at the drain valve, pump assembly or water supply valves. Tighten all clamps with pliers. Leaking parts should be replaced — not repaired.

Good luck and remember, if you need further advice or assistance, pick up a brochure or talk to the approachable home improvement experts at Beaver Lumber.
