

Munching away

When the sun's shining and the birds are singing, nothing can be better than going on a picnic. That's just what these two families thought Wednesday so they set out a blanket beside the river in Cedarvale Park and munched the afternoon away. The pic-

Hire wire act

Glen Rogers, an Ontario Hydro worker, spent his Tuesday afternoon in a crane high above the streets of Georgetown. Glen was performing some routine checks on the hydro boxes situated along Guelph St., while at the same time getting a great tan for the summer beach scene. (Herald photo)

Silver Creek saviors

No, this group isn't playing in the water to cool off, they're members of the Isaac Walton Fly Fisherman group which, in connection with the Ministry of Natural Resources and the Credit Valley Conservation Area, with special help from Home Hardware, are rehabilitating Silver Creek in

Rejuvenating Cedarvale

Larry Frizzell was busy Wednesday afternoon at Cedarvale Park in Georgetown preparing to seed the park's soccer field. The Recreation and Parks employees for Halton Hills said the field is regularly reseeded to prevent the growth of weeds and to fill in the spots where players knock clumps of grass off the field.
