Don't lose respect for the dangers of gasoline

Many people do it by launching a boat. Cleaning the basement and preparing the barbecue for action is another approach. Some just get the lawn mower ready to roll.

However Ontario consumers prepare for summer, experts at the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations' Fuels Safety Branch suggest they spend a few minutes thinking about the safe handling of the province's most misused fuel - gasoline.

"Consumers use gasoline so frequently they tend to lose respect for it," says fuels safety director Bob Clendinning. "But, tragically, loss of life and property can result from explosions and fires on the water and around the home. Usually, they're caused by the lack of a little caution."

For boaters, the Canadian Coast Guard recommends a simple step-by-step plan to safe refueling. Covering all eight points in this process can help eliminate boating explosions, frequently caused when the captain fails to ensure gasoline fumes are cleared from the boat's bilge.

1. Tie the boat securely to the dock.
2. Switch off the engine, don't use electrical switches and make sure all passengers are ashore.
3. Extinguish all open flames, permit no smoking within nine metres of the boat or pumps and have a fire extinguisher handy on the refueling dock.
4. On cruisers, "cuddy cabin" outboard craft and sailcraft, close all doors and hatches.
5. Put portable tanks on the dock - never refill them onboard.
6. When filling tanks, hold the nozzle firmly against the fill pipe and use a grounding cable, if available, to prevent static electricity buildup. Never overfill the tank.

7. Wipe up any spillage, then turn on the bilge blower, if you have one, for at least five minutes. On open craft with covered engines, open the hatches for ventilation.

8. Make sure there's no smell of gasoline before starting the engine.

More information on safe boating is available from the Canadian Coast Guard, 1080 Brock Road South, Units 15 and 16, Pickering, Ont. L1W 3H3, or by calling (416) 831-2300.
