Summer work guidelines

Many people don't realize that finding a job is only half the battle. Keeping your job is equally important. Make the most of your summer work experience by following some basic guidelines.

First, always be on time. Make sure you know who to contact in case you can't help being late one day. Prepare yourself for those days you may need to call in sick by knowing your contact person and procedure to follow.

Second, good manners are always important. It may not always be easy, but if you are dealing with the public, try to be polite and courteous. If you are experiencing difficulties with your co-workers, calmly clear up the problem immediately so it won't interfere with your job performance.

At your workplace, make sure you know your responsibilities and duties. If necessary, ask for a copy of a job description. Find out to whom you report and who has authority over you.

Try to keep these things in mind but remember to have fun. Make the most of your summer by giving your best to your job.
