

Fall Fair Contest

Dear Parents: Are your children driving you up the wall this summer? Are they constantly shooting your ideas down because they are too boring, or are you shooting their ideas down because they are too expensive?

Now both parties can be satisfied. The Georgetown Fall Fair and the Acton Fall Fair, both this September, will be holding a junior category for most of their contests, like crafts, sewing, art, baking and flower arranging. While the Fall Fair is still a little ways off, you can keep your children busy and content by having them create something for one or more of these contests.

Below is a list of the various contests, run by the Georgetown Fall Fair. Look in next Friday's Herald for contests put on by the Acton Fall Fair.

For more information call Marion Jonassen in Georgetown at 877-8217 or Marilyn Patterson in Acton at 853-3587.

Do you like insects?

Joel Cunningham, 9, Georgetown: "Not really. They bite you and they squirm around. They really bother me."

Nick Altobelli, 7, Georgetown: "No, I don't because they fly around and get in your eyes and ears and stuff. I especially don't like bees because they can sting you."

Ashleigh Irwin, 6, Georgetown: "Yes, I like insects. I like lady bugs and caterpillars. They're pretty and nice to look at."

What it means to sleepwalk

There is a sleep center in your brain, which regulates the sleeping and waking of your body.

When this sleep center goes to work, it does two things: It blocks off part of your brain so that it goes to sleep and you no longer have the will to do anything; and, it blocks off certain nerves that bring outside messages to your brain, permitting your body to fall asleep.

Usually, the sleep center of your brain and your body are connected but sometimes they become separated.

When this happens, the brain sleeps but the body remain awake. People in this situation usually sit up in bed or stand near it. Some actually get out of bed and walk around, but they don't do much more than walk.

A sleepwalker doesn't usually remember sleepwalking when he or she wakes up.

Sleep walking is far more common in children than in adults.
