

New competition for Raiders next season

The Georgetown Chrysler Raiders will face new competition next fall with the addition of a Caledon Junior B squad - which is owned by none other than the inventor of the board game Trivial Pursuit Scott Abbott.

Mr. Abbott a resident of Caledon and one of the inventors of Trivial Pursuit, was awarded an expansion Junior B franchise by the Ontario Hockey Association in late November and has named the club after his favorite N.H.L. club, the Montreal Canadiens - the Junior B squad name will be spelled Canadians and will bear a team sweater similar to that of Montreal's.

All this spells good news for the Raiders and the Junior B's west division in which the Canadians will be part of.

"It will strengthen the league and give more exposure to Junior B hockey," said Raider President

Finn Poulstrup.

This new team, along with the addition of a Trenton Junior B team to play in the east division, will bring the total number of teams in the Central Junior B League to 18, nine in each division.

Junior B hockey fans can be sure Caledon will be a great addition to the league. Mr. Abbott has been an avid sports fan for most of his life. He's also a co-owner of the King Caledon Farm thoroughbred racing stable and a part owner of the Devil's Pulpit golf course in Caledon. Fans can rest assured that he will make his new hockey team a success.

Another plus for the league is that the Canadians will play in Bolton, which is only a half hour drive from most of the teams in the west division.

The two additions to Central Junior B league, Ajax and Royal York, have been met with cheers and jeers. While Ajax have provided stiff competition for opponents and have chalked up nine wins and 20 points, Royal York have earned only one win during the season and provide little competition for most of their opponents.

With the Raiders in the middle of a big comeback year, fans can look forward to even better competition with the new Caledon Canadians next season.

Shevalier making waves in Junior A hockey scene

Jeff Shevalier, Acton Sabres' leading scorer and Most Valuable Player last season, has proved his worth in the Junior A scene with the North Bay Centennials so far this season.

Shevalier, in 36 games with the Centennials, has scored 18 goals and 15 assists and is ninth in scoring on the North Bay Junior A squad. He has just 14 penalty minutes and has netted three game winning goals.

Jeff is one of the key reasons why the North Bay Centennials are in top spot in the O.H.L. with 57 points, with 28 wins, 11 losses and 1 tie. In his first year in Junior A hockey, Jeff Shevalier in showing fans he has what it takes and if he continues to perform as he has been, we could very well see him make the N.H.L. entry draft within the next few years.

Bob Goldham trade now 2nd biggest

Prior to the recent Maple Leafs shake up that sent Gary Leeman, Craig Berube, Michel Petit, Alexander Godynuk and Jeff Reese to Calgary and brought Doug Gilmour, Jamie Macoun, Rick Wamsley, Ric Nattress, and Kent Manderville to Toronto, Georgetown hockey legend Bob Goldham had been part of the biggest trade, in terms of number of players, in N.H.L. history.

The deal happened more than 40 years ago, on July 13, 1950 when the Detroit Red Wings and Chicago Blackhawks completed a nine-player swap. The Red Wings sent Harry Lumley, Jack Stewart, Al Bewsbury, Don Morrison and Pete Babando to the Blackhawks for Jimmy Henry, Bob Goldham, Gaye Stewart and Metro Prystal.
