The deadly risk of cigarettes among teens

If you think the dangers of tobacco and teenage smoking are overblown (HeartHealth, Winter 1991), consider these recent estimates from the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health:

- Ninety-five per cent of smokers start smoking before the age of 18.
- For every 100,000 smokers who are now 15 years old (half of them boys and half girls), tobacco eventually will kill at least 18,000.
- Compare that with the number of estimated future deaths among the same 100,000 young Canadians caused by car accidents (1,200), murders (130), and abuse of drugs other than tobacco (10).
- In other words, tobacco eventually will kill 15 times more Canadians than car accidents, tobacco will account for 135 times more future deaths than will murder. And tobacco will kill an estimated 1,800 times more than will abuse of other drugs.

The Council's estimates were based on data from the Laboratory Centre for Disease Control, of Health and Welfare Canada.

Future deaths per 100,000 teenagers now 15 years old
