Three weeks at sea, four men, one mission— to cure cancer.

After travelling 267 nautical miles a day and dealing with the ever-expanding oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico, Dan McKenzie and his crew are happy to be back on solid ground following a 30-day journey around North America to help raise funds for cancer research.

Two years ago McKenzie, a Georgetown resident, decided he wanted to take a stand against cancer. Both his wife and father have battled the disease.

"It's an issue that has affected all of us. There isn't anyone I know that hasn't been affected directly or had a relative or friend with cancer," he said. "I thought I can do something to help in a little way."
