

LeFeuvre honoured for lifelong career in racing

work from everywhere to get a shot at that. I got second place and won $3,000 behind (former IndyCar star) Robby Gordon, whose background was in off-road. It was a thrill for us when Robby showed the seven two-ounce gold bars— 24 karat from Chase Manhattan— to my daughter Alex. That was something else.”

LeFeuvre built his own air-cooled engines at his home-based shop and the liquid-cooling engines came from Autocraft in Toledo, Ohio. During his lengthy career he wrote off just two cars in crashes, breaking his leg at a Stratford-area race, and thanks to the five-point driver's harness, walking away uninjured from the other that left a seat cover as the only salvageable part of the wreck.

When BF Goodrich politely decided to discontinue its financial support of LeFeuvre in 1997 after 13 years as a sponsor in favour of backing an entire series, he wasn't interested in continuing at a less-competitive level.

“We still go to as many events as we can in races that I've run in and also a lot of races throughout the States,” he added.

“There are still a few of the old guys running. They're getting up there, yet it's still a lot of fun. I know how most of them are going to do because I did it for so many years. I always go into the pits and hang around, rather than sit in the stands and then just go home. after the race is over.”
