Silas ranked 60th

a number or weight I'm trying to get to. As long as you know that you're stronger and more comfortable out on the ice and be able to look after yourself physically, being intense on every shift, that's what you want. I work out with a couple of guys who've gone through the (draft) process and that's helped."

Silas also has the advice of Georgetown resident and Bulls' teammate Andy Bathgate— taken in the fifth round by Pittsburgh last June— to fall back on, along with Belleville coach and general manager George Burnett, who has sent several players on to the NHL, including Silas's former defence partner, P.K. Subban of the Montreal Canadiens.

The Silas family is represented by agent Kyle Dubas. His NHL clients include Ottawa's Mike Fisher and Andrew Brunette of the Minnesota Wild.

Silas also credits his uncle Peter for being a positive influence in his career, providing the former Halton Hurricane with the confidence to compete at an elite level.

"When you're young you don't think it's too tough to make it to the NHL, but then you realize how many players actually make it even if they get drafted and it's not many," Silas said.

Playing on the Olympic-size surface in Belleville's Yardmen Arena seems not to have hurt his resume', which includes selections to represent Canada on three separate occasions and a gold medal with Team Ontario at the World Under-17 Hockey Challenge in B.C. last year.

Another local-area player who could be selected Saturday is Campbellville's Mike Sgarbossa, also a Christ the King student. The 17-year-old centre with the OHL's Saginaw Spirit jumped to 92nd in the Central Scouting's rankings from 183rd.
