Police to step up enforcement

Project Safe Start is underway

With children heading back to school Halton Police are out in full force making sure area roads are safe.

Project Safe Start got underway today (Tuesday) and will run through Sept. 17.

The project, which was launched in 2006, is designed to remind drivers to be courteous to other drivers and children, particularly at this time when they make their way back to school.

Safe Start utilizes both District Response Enforcement Units and District Patrol officers so every available officer will be focusing his/her attention on the project.

The officers will be focusing on the five "S's":

- Speeding
- Seatbelts
- Stop Signs
- School Zones
- School Buses

Police will also be on the lookout for drivers using their cell phones and other handheld devices.

"This campaign is particularly vital at this time of year as our children go back to school," said Halton Police Chief Gary Crowell. "But this education and enforcement campaign won't end here the Halton Regional Police Service will continue such initiatives throughout the year."

St. John offers school bus safety tips

sure they are not at risk of being hit

- Do not approach the bus until signaled by the driver
- Never walk or play behind a bus
- If they drop something in front of the bus remind them not to pick it up. If they disappear from sight, the bus driver may assume they have left. It is safer just to leave it until the bus is gone or to ask the driver for assistance

On the bus:

- Children should listen to the directions of the bus driver
- Keep all appendages inside the bus
- Avoid roughhousing, no yelling, jumping or throwing things— anything that could distract the driver
- Keep the aisles clear
