Control the home flu hotspots

To help control the spread of germs at home, it's important to keep your house clean, especially those high traffic areas of the home. "A virus can survive on surfaces like faucets, the fridge, doorknobs, telephones and children's toys," says Todd Cline, product researcher at Procter & Gamble. "To help keep family members healthy, clean and disinfect these commonly touched surfaces on a regular basis."

Cline suggests that Canadians should be especially vigilant during flu season, "You can help to stop the spread of the flu during the heavy flu season months of October and November and beyond by regularly cleaning commonly touched surfaces in your home." He recommends that families pay special attention to these home hotspots:

- Television remote controls— because everyone in the family likes to have their hands on these.
- House phone and cell phones— most family members use the telephone on a daily basis.
- Faucets— after washing, wipe and dry hands gently with a paper towel or a clean towel. Then, use the same towel to turn off the tap so you don't re-contaminate your hands.
- Thermometers— don't forget to sanitize these immediately after taking a temperature.
- Toothbrushes— keep extra toothbrushes in the house in case someone gets sick.

- Toys— keep these clean, especially if young children are placing them in their mouths.
