Honda's robot celebrates milestone

ASIMO, the world's most advanced humanoid robot, celebrated its 10th anniversary on Oct 31.

To mark this special occasion, Honda launched a dedicated website at www.world.honda.com/ASIMO which hosted films and photographs detailing ASIMO's evolution over the past 10 years.

A 'Run with Asimo' smartphone and iPhone app has also been produced to allow users to interact with a virtual version of the robot on their phone.

ASIMO was created 10 years ago as part of Honda's program of research and development into robotics and human mobility.

After 10 years of innovation, ASIMO can now run and walk on uneven slopes and surfaces, climb stairs, and reach for and grasp objects. ASIMO can also comprehend and respond to simple voice commands, recognize faces and even avoid moving obstacles as it runs.

ASIMO has led to breakthroughs in mobility technology, but Honda's ultimate goal is to develop ASIMO into a robot to help people, both by carrying out day-to-day tasks and by performing work too dangerous for a human, such as firefighting and cleaning up toxic spills.

Honda is now focusing its research on the development of ASIMO's intelligence, as well as exploring the scope for interaction between humans and humanoid robots.
