Rail work on trestle bridge expected to end next month

By LISA TALLYN
Staff Writer

Work is ongoing to remove a bottleneck on the Georgetown GO corridor that should improve reliability for GO train service.

The work will also improve GO's ability to add more trains for the expansion to Acton/Guelph and Kitchener/Waterloo.

Part of the project includes a span installation over the Credit River near Armstrong Ave. that began last Tuesday and is to be complete by December.

Last July, CN, which is carrying out the construction work on behalf of Metrolinx, as it owns the rail corridor, began working on the piers and abutment of the span. That portion of the project is to be complete next summer.

The project is being carried out as part of the GO Transportation Infrastructure Projects program with funding from the Building Canada Fund.

CN Rail crews were busy installing a segment of bridge on the trestle over the Credit River in Georgetown last week.
