Region looks at freezing taxes

"Last year a lot of councillors said, 'Well, we're doing it this year, but next year we will have to begin increases.' But we were able to do it," said Carr, adding, "This year was the second largest capital expenditure for roads, wastewater and water."

Carr said the special ingredient in a zero per cent budget was development charges.

"We're making (developers) pay for the full cost of growth. We're able to allow taxpayers to have a freeze, while all of our new infrastructure, our new roads and our upgrades are being paid for by development charges."

He continued, "It's something new to the Region of Halton, it's never happened before," referring to the entire cost of new growth being paid for through development charges.

Regional council will resume the budget review process in January.
