So she sent the company an e-mail. Paulitzki said she didn't know what to make of the e-mail and initially ignored it suspecting it might be junk mail, until they researched a little further and discovered the offer was a legitimate opportunity for them.

They're both excited to be taking part.

"We feel it's going to be an amazing opportunity to promote our business and showcase a product that's needed in the marketplace right now."

And meeting some celebrities is a plus.

"It's right up our alley," joked Paulit-zki. "We're very excited about meeting the stars," she added.

Boatwright said the Georgetown company will be announced in press releases promoting the event, and the women will have the opportunity to show their products to the celebrities and give them to those they want to.

Boatwright said the ideal outcome would be for Paulitzki and McMullen to see their product featured in a publication like OK magazine for example in the hand of the child of a celebrity.

She welcomes inquiries from other Canadian companies interested in having their products included in this Style Lounge or other events. Contact secretroomevents@yahoo.com
