

Three Catholic schools to undergo renovations

in Acton and Georgetown, it will make the wait for funds much more manageable. He added there will be some short-term inconvenience resulting from the construction, but it will be offset by the long-term benefit to the school communities.

"Our school staff will work to ensure the easiest transition possible during the autumn construction period," he said.

St. Brigid: A four-classroom addition for primary classes will be built at the south corner of the building with alterations to the current special education classroom to create a fourth kindergarten classroom near the current three. A new special education classroom will be included in the new addition. The addition is expected to result in the gradual removal of portables on the site by about 2018. However, portables may be needed during the construction for safety reasons.

The new Kindergarten room would be ready by September 2011, while the classroom addition would be completed by mid-winter and ready for January 2012.

St. Catherine: An eight-classroom addition at the east corner of the building, alterations to the special education classroom and two additional Kindergarten rooms to complement the current three.

Again, the additional classrooms will have limited impact on the removal of portables due the predicted future enrolment growth in the area.

The two Kindergarten classrooms will be ready for Sept. 2011 while the eight-room addition will be ready for the start of school in January 2012.

St. Joseph: A two-classroom addition at the west end or back end of the school, plus a classroom expansion/alteration to the classroom adjacent the two Kindergarten rooms for a total of three. The project should result in the removal of two portables from the site. The third Kindergarten room will be ready for September 2011. It is estimated that the two-room addition will be ready by Sept. 2011 too, but in the event it's not, the portables will remain on site.
