Below: Brusse checks one of the small nozzles which directs water to the tree roots waste no water— as in the other systems— it goes directly to the plant, where it does the most good. We also irrigate between 5 and 10 a.m., to reduce evaporation of the water in the hot sun.”

Although none of these measures come cheap, Stensson has no doubt they are worthwhile. The company has had a long-standing reputation for being a good corporate neighbour for years, and were recently recognized for their efforts with the presentation of the Halton Hills Chamber of Commerce Green Award, awarded to a company recognized for environmental preservation through conservation efforts in the following areas: energy, water, waste, green procurement and protection of natural heritage.

Considering the efforts Sheridan Nurseries has taken to conserve water alone, the award is well deserved.
