

or an occasional walker, whether you want a casual stroll or a rough ramble, Terra Cotta has a trail for every interest or ability.

"We're blessed with a variety of trails at Terra Cotta. 'The Path to Recreation', that's the atmosphere we're going for. We want people to get out there and walk, to discover what Terra Cotta has to offer," enthuses Lidster. "Part of our recent work addressed the trails, including new trail markers and resurfacing trails with wood-chips, designed to make them more user-friendly."

There are a number of trails at Terra Cotta, taking visitors past the forests, fields, lakes and ponds typical of the Niagara Escarpment surroundings. These trails accommodate all levels of trail users. On one extreme is a stretch of the Bruce Trail, which follows the valley and is a bit arduous, though it rewards hikers with spectacular views.

The other extreme is a trail that follows an old camp ground trail and, with its level wood-chip surface, is ideal for strollers for elderly people.

Sharing the wilderness with hikers is a wide-range of wildlife, any of which might dart or soar into view for a few precious moments. These include gentle white-tail deer, rabbit, coyote, red fox, turkey vultures, hawks of various kinds, groundhogs and more. The opportunity to witness one or more of these animals in the wild is one of the purest of pleasures.

The most recently completed change at Terra Cotta is a channel that allows water flowing down Spring Creek to bypass Wolf Lake on its way to the Credit River. This project has a number of important ecological aims.

"Wolf Lake is a warm water body, which is ideal for brook trout, a fish we are trying to re-establish in the conservation area. Unfortunately, the warm water that flowed out of the lake was not healthy for other species downstream such as salmon," explains Lidster. "The bypass channel will divert the cold water in Spring Creek
