Two people charged in connection with a massive fraud operation that saw several Mississauga and Brampton dealerships scammed by car salesmen, have been acquitted of all charges.

Lynn Fuller, 52, of Georgetown, former business manager at Airport Nissan, along with car buyer Ranjit Bislam, 49, of Brampton, were found not guilty of all charges in Brampton court last week by Justice Casey Hill.

A large part of the probe centred around Nissan dealerships in Mississauga and Brampton and the 401 Dixie Kia in Mississauga, police said at the time of the arrests in January of 2007.

Hill said the Crown proved an unlawful conspiracy had been committed at the dealership but that neither Fuller nor Bislam were involved. Fuller had been accused of being a co-conspirator in the fraud that Crown prosecutor Cam Watson said was allegedly driven by salesman Shahid (Sean) Sheikh, 52, who has yet to stand trial. His case was severed during the trial.

Hill said it was difficult to see what role Fuller, whom he described as a "credible witness" and "a person of good character," could have played in a scheme that involved mostly non-English speaking people of Indian ethnicity buying cars sold by Sheikh using forged documentation.
