Comedy plays continue in August/Sept.

Coming Apart, by Fred Carmichael, features a successful humor columnist and a romance novelist whose marriage is on the rocks.

In a series of wildly comical flashbacks and flash-forwards, each remembers different versions of their romantic past, and each has a different future in mind.

Hilarious revelations bring about a mirthful happy ending. Directed by David Glover, the play stars Pat Beaven, Carol McCone, Gary Seibert, and Patrick C. Smith, and runs August 17-28.

Every woman owes it to herself to take her man to see the final Festival show, Shirley Valentine by Willy Russell, directed by Neville Worsnop.

Shirley is a frustrated middle-class housewife who longs for more in her life. An opportunity and a challenge arise when a friend invites her to go along on a holiday to Greece.

"This role has been on my bucket list for ages," says star Carol Beauchamp. "Her experiences and views on life so well reflect the lives of many women, and I am thrilled to finally have the chance to be Shirley."

The play runs September 14-18, and is a must-see for anyone who has enjoyed the movie, as the way Shirley reflects on her life, her husband, and her children is even more touching on stage, and guaranteed to have you laughing out loud..

Each show has weekday and weekend matinees, and evening performances. Tickets are $23 for matinees and $27 for evenings with a 10 per cent discount for booking all three shows together. Group rates are also available.
