

Dolman gets his bronze work done at the Artcast foundry on Armstrong Avenue in Georgetown, known for creating famous pieces such as the Juno Beach Memorial in Normandy and the figure of Glenn Gould at the CBC building in Toronto. Eric Knoespel started the foundry in 1964, and with a team that includes his son Marcus and daughter Mona, has built a strong reputation among North American sculptors.

Bronzes are made with the "lost wax process", similar to that used in ancient Egypt. The artist provides an original in any type of material. Liquid rubber is poured over the original to create an initial mould, in pieces that can be put together to form an empty space, matching the original sculpture. This can be used to make multiple copies of the art.

Molten wax is poured into the rubber cavity to create a temporary wax duplicate (hollow for larger works). Small wax bars called sprues are added to the duplicate. These will create channels in the final mould that will enable molten metal to flow into every area of the piece and air to escape.

The wax duplicate is coated with layers of ceramic slurry and stucco to create a strong shell, which is then heated with steam to melt out the wax. It is then cured in a furnace, pre-heated and encased in sand to accept the pouring of molten bronze. Once the metal cools, the ceramic is chipped away, the sprue system is removed and the surface texture is restored in disturbed areas.

The final sculpture can then be polished or patinated - a chemical process to colourize selected surface areas.

SLEEP APNEA?

We Can Help!

Sleep apnea affects over 1 person in 15, it's more prevalent in men and 90% of those affected may be going undiagnosed and untreated. Chronic sleep apnea is a serious condition that not only robs people of rest, it can be detrimental to your health. The dangers of sleep apnea can be reduced through therapy and that's where Young's can help. Our short questionnaire will quickly determine if you're at risk. If you are, call your doctor. We'll also show you the effective usage and care of the latest equipment and make sure you get the full benefits of your therapy. If you think you have sleep apnea, don't delay, call your doctor or Young's today.
