The first few days of spring have felt a lot like summer, but nobody is complaining.

In fact most people are thrilled and many area residents have brought their bicycles and golf clubs out of storage and donned their sandals and shorts to head outside to soak in the rays.

The balmy weather has also been good news for some area businesses.

It's meant brisk patio business at both Kelsey's and Boston Pizza in Georgetown over the past couple of weeks.

Danny McSween, manager of Kelsey's, said they opened their patio March 10th weekend and many customers have been choosing to sit outside—about two weeks sooner than normal.

Despite the summer-like weather Wednesday, students at Christ the King Secondary School aren't allowed to wear their uniform shorts until May 1.

But several students at the school don't think that's a fair policy in light of the balmy conditions, and decided to don their shorts in protest.

Grade 12 CTK student Mike Gomes said after a student received an in-school suspension for wearing shorts Monday a movement consisting of about 350 students formed and they launched
