Keeping Canada clean

Industry-led program safely disposes of harmful Chemical

(NC) - As recycling programs become increasingly available, allowing Canadians to dispose of their refrigerators and air conditioners, it's no secret that these appliances contain gases - called refrigerant - that can be harmful to the environment.

So what does your local contractor do with used equipment such as this when removing it from homes and businesses around the country? From your kitchen refrigerator to your central AC system to the coolers in your local grocery store, the answer is Refrigerant Management Canada (RMC). RMC is a voluntary, industry-led program devoted to keeping waste refrigerant from entering the environment.

When cooling systems are repaired or replaced, there is an immediate need to dispose of the refrigerant in a safe manner to ensure the Ozone Depleting Substances (ODS) do not escape into the atmosphere. Once a certified HVACR contractor removes the refrigerant from the appliance, it is taken to an authorized wholesaler who tracks and stores it until an appropriate volume is reached. RMC then collects the refrigerant and destroys it in an environmentally-friendly way, keeping it from being vented into the atmosphere and potentially damaging the ozone layer.

Celebrating over ten years of protecting the Canadian environment from these harmful toxins, RMC was created by, and is administered by, the Heating, Refrigeration and Air Conditioning Institute (HRAI) on behalf of the HVACR industry. Since its inception, RMC has had tremendous success in helping to protect the ozone layer and to keep our environment clean. To date, the program has safely destroyed 2.6 million kilograms of ozone-depleting waste refrigerant, effectively keeping 5.1 million kilograms of greenhouse gases out of our atmosphere.
