A man is facing several charges after an elderly Georgetown woman was held captive in her home for several hours Thursday (June 28).

The 87-year-old woman discovered an unknown man gathering items in the house at 10 a.m.

At around 2:15 p.m., Halton Regional Police received a 911 call from the woman indicating that she was being held captive and the man was still in the residence.

When officers responded, they were unable to gain entry through the locked front door and when the woman attempted to unlock it, she was grabbed around the neck, dragged to an adjacent room and thrown to the floor.

The intruder began kicking the woman and after officers were able to get into the home through a rear screen door, they observed the man holding a knife to the homeowner's throat.

Officers were able to incapacitate the intruder with a taser prior to making the arrest.

The homeowner sustained a small cut to one of her hands during the encounter.

John James Rodney Hill, 28, of no fixed address has been charged with break, enter and commit robbery, forcible confinement, assault with a weapon, assault, weapons dangerous, utter threats and assault peace officer with intent to resist.
