Blue Box program doubles collections

Sargent is currently working to organize the Blue Bag program in local apartments and townhouses. Residents will be given blue bags to fill with recycleables and the bags will be emptied into containers at a main depot on the property.

Sargent says he has run into a snag in trying to get the blue bags from the Region, but the materials should be available by the fall. There are currently two recycling trucks picking up recycleables in Halton Hills, and money for a third has been included in the Region's 1990 budget.

the works for the Block Parent program, but she won't elaborate, saying they will start up in the fall.

The rest of the Block Parent Board members will remain, so Elaine isn't concerned about the position she has taken on.

"It won't be hard to take over. We have a very good crew," she says.

"I like to organize things," she says.

The Block Parent Program has done a lot for Elaine and her family, too. Earlier this year a man asked her young daughter to get into his car. She had grown up being told what to do in such a situation, and she did her mom proud. She refused and ran to the nearest Block Parent home.

It was as if it was second nature to her, and she didn't even tell her parents what had happened until later when the same thing happened to another child.

Elaine's enthusiasm for helping out means she will never be idle.

"I can't just sit at home," she says.
