Phil's
Basement

For 15 years now, spring has been heralded by the twins' birthday. Kyle and Belinda won't be 15 until the 23rd, but we celebrated yesterday to accommodate an enormous bunch of Em's family who came to help blow out 30 candles.

Among the flock was Em's Cousin Hilton. Now, Hilton subscribes to a great many popular science-type magazines, loves to talk about scientific things and also sincerely believes that aliens from outer space have already taken up residence on planet Earth. Hmm.

Yesterday, Hilton was going on about something that's near and dear to his heart these days - using photovoltaics to generate electricity. We had a good old chat about them, once I figured out what he was talking about. He kept calling them "Photo Voltaires".

Hilton may be kind of off-beat, but I had to admit at the kids' birthday party that he may have been on to a good thing when he said he was going to use "those Photo Voltaires" to provide electricity at his summer cabin up north.

Photovoltaic cells ("photo" meaning light and "voltaics" meaning voltage) generate electricity directly from sunlight, which means it's a free energy source once the system is installed. The cells are made from semi-conductor materials which are treated with special additives to make them sensitive to light. When sunlight hits the cells, electrons in the semi-conductor material generate electricity. A bit complicated, but still free!

Apparently they're cheaper now than they used to be, but photovoltaic systems aren't economically feasible yet except for cottages, cabins and remote homes in areas outside The Hydro's electrical "grid".

In Cousin Hilton's case, though, a photovoltaic system could handle most of the electrical needs at his small place, like lighting, radio, television and water pumping. For the moment, though, he's happy just to talk about it. When he's not talking about little green men and women, that is.

I have to admit that I'd rather hear about the "Photo Voltaires"!

This newspaper, in conjunction with Ontario Hydro, is bringing you Phil's Basement to help "bring home" ideas on how to save energy. To receive the booklet "Plan For Energy Efficiency", call Ontario Hydro at 1-800-263-9000 and tell them Phil sent you.
